Data Dump

MORTGAGE News Daily

Mortgage rates moved lower this week, falling from 6.32% to 6.25%. Markets absorbed a heavy batch of economic data, including the November jobs report, retail sales, CPI, and PCE, but none offered a decisive shift in the broader economic outlook. With some measures showing cooling and others holding firm, the data did little to immediately alter expectations for Fed policy, especially given recent gaps in data collection. Still, the overall tone was soft enough to pull bond yields lower and allow mortgage rates to ease modestly by week's end.

📉 Mortgage rates fell to 6.25% this week from 6.32%. It was a data-heavy week with the November jobs report, retail sales, CPI, and PCE, but none of the reports meaningfully shifted the broader outlook. With some measures cooling and others holding firm, the overall tone was just soft enough to pull rates lower.

📅 No major economic data is scheduled next week due to the holiday week.
